Finding out what type(s) of mold(s) growing on your EC3 Mold Screening Test Plates is easy!

Interpreting Your Results

After the 5-day incubation period, any mold growth can be considered a positive test result. This growth indicates mold present from your sample area or item. If there is no growth, the mold test is negative. Simply discard the dish outside in a trash receptacle outside.

In the event your petri dish shows signs of mold growth after the incubation period, you may decide to send the sample to be analyzed at IMS Laboratory to determine the type of mold(s) present. Obtaining this additional information about the type(s) of mold present is useful in determining allergy treatment and/or clean up processes.

Detailed Sample Shipping Instructions

If you have a positive test result and you wish to have the sample analyzed by IMS Laboratory, make sure each sample is taped shut securely and labeled clearly with your last name and the location where the test was taken on the bottom of each dish. Place the sample(s) in a sealable plastic bag and ship in a padded envelope, along with the completed information form and your check, money order or credit card information, to:

IMS Laboratory
3130 Old Farm Lane, Suite 1
Commerce Township, MI 48390

After the lab's receipt of your samples, it will take approximately 2 weeks to receive your laboratory results via email. If you need your results faster, both EXPRESS service and RUSH service are available for an additional charge. Those services may be selected on the form.

*Please remember to label all samples with last name and location of test on the bottom of each petri dish***

NOTE: In the event that samples are damaged in the shipping process and are otherwise unreadable, IMS Laboratory is not responsible for the cost of retesting.
